Singapore

Wealth Mobility Competitiveness Score
(Out of 100)
79.5

Why It Matters

Singapore is one of the world's pre-eminent wealth mobility hubs, anchored by institutional credibility, top-tier rule of law, and the deepest pool of capital markets infrastructure in Asia. Its position has been reinforced by the steady migration of wealth out of Hong Kong since 2020 and by sustained expansion of its family office regime. The combination of policy stability, sophisticated wealth management infrastructure, and a neutral geopolitical posture continues to make Singapore the default Asian anchor for globally mobile wealth seeking stability and global reach.

Framework Perspective

Singapore scores at the top of the Global Wealth Mobility Framework across institutional quality, rule of law, financial sophistication, and capital mobility. Its strengths in long-term wealth planning, regulatory predictability, and global connectivity are among the most consistent in the framework. The country's relative weaknesses are minor and structural — taxation is competitive but not the lowest, and physical capacity is constrained. None of these meaningfully detract from its competitive position, which has if anything strengthened with recent tightening of family office eligibility (the Section 13O and 13U schemes) signaling a deliberate shift toward higher-quality wealth rather than greater volume.

Wealth Mobility Indicators and Implications

Singapore continues to absorb wealth migration from across Asia, particularly from Hong Kong, mainland China, and Indonesia. The recent eligibility tightening has not reversed inflows but has refocused the profile of incoming wealth towards more substantial, longer term commitments. Family office formations remain robust, and Singapore is increasingly the preferred location for multi-generational planning across the region.

Key Insight

Wealth mobility leadership is sustained not by tax arbitrage alone, but by the layered combination of institutional quality, predictability, and infrastructure. Jurisdictions that build this combination tend to retain their competitive position even as they raise the bar for entry.
